

A Different Path to Higher Education

Students unable to commit to higher education right out of high school for any reason can take another route to higher education. Whether they need to be able to work their way through college or take a break from traditional academics, massage therapy offers an opportunity for high school grads to have a healthy, productive career while keeping college in sight down the road.

The Lauterstein-Conway Massage School was started by David Lauterstein and John Conway in 1989. It was the first school in Texas to offer an advanced curriculum beyond the hours required for licensure. The Lauterstein-Conway (TLC) Massage School and Clinic now offers the only curriculum in the U.S. that includes, in the basic and advanced programs, Swedish massage, Body Mobilization Techniques, Pregnancy Massage, Sports Massage, Orthopedic Massage, Deep Massage: The Lauterstein Method, Deep Tissue, Zero Balancing, Shiatsu, and Trigger Point Therapy.

Why Massage Therapy?

- * High earning potential for high school grads.
- * Flexible work schedules that can easily adapt to and accommodate college coursework.
- * Industry overlap for aspiring healthcare workers.
- * Low stress (if not relaxing) work to perform.
- * Can become a side job post college graduation.

Why TLCschool?

- * 29 years experience in massage education.
- * Finish school in as little as six-12 months.
- * Morning/afternoon/evening/weekend schedules.
- * Career advancement support and opportunities.
- * Continuing education and advanced trainings.
