How to Get Your Massage Therapy License in Texas

Licensing is obtained by applying with the Texas Department of Licensing and Regulations (TDLR). The applicant must first meet the following criteria:

1. Complete a State-approved 500-hour Massage Therapy training program.
2. Take and pass the Massage and Bodywork Licensing Exam (MBLEX).

What does the MBLEX look like?

It is administered through an online testing center approved by the Federation of State Massage Therapy Boards (FSMTB).

How does TLC's Curriculum Differ from other schools?

TLC has cultivated a dynamic course format that carefully blends the optimal mix of massage theory and practical applications, providing students with unparalleled quality of instruction. Our unique tapestry structure of curriculum combines anatomy & physiology, pathology & kinesiology together based on the part of the body students are learning that day.

We also teach the Lauterstein Method which is also known as Deep Massage. Deep Massage is about high quality of connection, not about quantity of pressure. The techniques evolved as combinations of soft tissue and skeletal work. Deep Massage cultivates a theory and practice which aims to contact the person in such a way that they let go from the inside out. If they don't let go from within, then nothing really significant can happen!

The TLC Student Massage Clinic provides extensive practice in Integrative Massage Therapy Techniques while working on a wide variety of clients that are provided by the school. During their time in the Internship, they will practice the therapeutic, communication, and business skills taught in class while working in a professional setting. This helps students build their confidence by gaining real-world experience.

The State requires all students to complete 50 hours of massage therapy sessions in a supervised setting. Our Internship is 50 1-hour sessions in the Student Clinic, scheduled outside the student's regular class time. Students are eligible to start the Internship halfway through the program.
